DU Credit and ECTS Conversion Guide

Dhofar University (DU) adheres to the OQF credit hour system, which is determined by notional learning hours. The calculation of OQF Credit Hours is based on the principle that one credit hour corresponds to three hours of learner activity per week for one semester. For further information, please visit: https://oaaqqa.gov.om/Oman-Qualifications-Framework/The-OQF-Manual-\(1\)/?lang=en-GB/?lang=en-GB)

The OQF credit system is adapted from the American credit hour system. Most of the courses offered at DU carry a weightage of 3 US credits. However, certain courses may have varying credit hours based on the degree level and program specifications.

For comprehensive details regarding our courses and their corresponding credits, please visit the following link: https://www.du.edu.om/images/Download_Section/DU-Catalogue-22-23.pdf

However, it is important to note that this minimum requirement may differ for specific programs. In terms of course load, 12 credits correspond to approximately 4 DU courses (equivalent to 24 ECTS).

CULTURAL INFORMATION

Here are some important cultural considerations to keep in mind when visiting Oman:

Dress code: Oman is a conservative Muslim country, and visitors are expected to dress modestly in public. It's recommended to cover your shoulders, chest, and knees, especially when visiting mosques or other religious sites.

Respect for religion: Islam is the official religion of Oman, and it's important to show respect for the religion and its practices. This includes avoiding public displays of affection, not eating or drinking in public during Ramadan, and removing your shoes before entering a mosque.

Greetings: It's common to greet people with "Salam" (peace) or "As-salamu alaykum" (peace be upon you). Handshakes are also common, but it's important to note that men and women generally do not shake hands with each other.

Social customs: Omanis are known for their hospitality and friendliness. If you're invited to someone's home, it's important to remove your shoes before entering someone's home.

Photography: Oman is a beautiful country, but it's important to be respectful when taking photographs. Always ask permission before taking someone's picture, especially if they are women or children.

Alcohol: While alcohol is available in Oman, it's important to note that drinking in public is illegal.

By keeping these cultural considerations in mind, you can ensure that your visit to Oman is respectful and enjoyable.

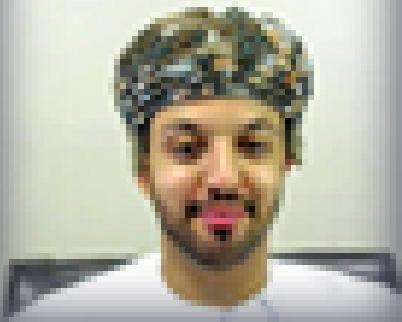

You may be assigned to a DU Cultural Exchange Buddy who will facilitate you during your stay in Salah/ Dhofar University. Your buddy will be able to explain the cultural dos and don'ts further, and the expectations at DU.
